recently been in discussion about where the show’s series finale is going to take place, and while it’s still a bit too early to say, it sounds like we could get closure on the fate of some beloved and rarely seen characters. In an interview with Entertainment Weekly, show creator Matt Groening said he has decided to wrap up the show this year. And it turns out, that meant bringing back a fan favorite, but rarely seen character. After years of wondering about the final season, writers have been working on one of the last cliffhangers to be resolved. A report by Groening's wife, Joyce, revealed the identity of the new character who was brought back for the final season, and as it turns out, she was an answer to one fan's question as well. During an interview with his wife, Groening said that he had a discussion with fan A.J.s (as in Adams), who he said is a guy, and asked him what that moment in the episode when an encounter with C-137's crew happened, and what that encounter ultimately meant. "He said that he'd been asking himself, what if somebody said no?" Groening told his wife. "He decided, he's going to say no to C-137. He's going to say no to C-137. This is significant because, years ago, Groening had talked about bringing back a character whose fate was unknown from the end of the second season. During that conversation, he said he was planning on bringing back Fry. "I realized it was time to bring Fry back," Groening told his wife. The big reveal? "She brings Fry back to life. Fry's back. Where he and Leela are together after he said no to C-137 is going to end up in a very different place." While the season
